By Steven Symes HP's printers have the ability to handle different size sheets of paper, depending on the model printer. Legal size paper measurements are 14 inches by 8.5 inches—larger than the popular size for printer paper. In order to print on this size, you will need to make adjustments to the printer's driver settings as well as the paper guides on the printer. If you are unsure if your printer can successfully feed legal size paper, check the paper handling specifications in your printer's user manual. Press the printer's "Cancel" button if you are in the middle of printing on the wrong-sized paper. Throw away any documents printed on the wrong-sized paper. Click on "File" at the top of the window, then select "Print" from the menu. Make sure the printer you need to use appears at the top of the window, or select it from the drop-down menu. Select the "Properties" button in the upper-right corner of the print window. Select the tab labeled "Features" or "Print/Quality" and choose the type of paper you are printing on in the "Paper Type" or "Paper Is" drop-down menu. Click on the drop-down menu labeled "Size" or "Size Is" and select "Legal" or "A5" from the list. Click on the "OK" button to save your selections. Remove all the paper from the printer's input tray and load in legal size paper, making sure to adjust the paper guides. Select the "Print" button on the computer's screen to begin the print job. It sounds like you have already done most of the steps there. If the standard troubleshooting did not resolve black not printing I would suggest removing the black cartridge. Turn it over and examine the area around the ink port. There are four orange plastic spots, left over from the protective cap. Make sure these are flush with the cartridge body, if not carefully trim them flush. If the plastic nubs protrude they can prevent the cartridge from seating properly. Before replacing the cartridge in the printer dribble a few (maybe four) drops of hot water into the ink port in the printer and two drops into the ink port on the cartridge then snap the cartridge back in position. It may also help to manually clean the printhead as described in the post here. I have also seen cases where leaving the printer overnight after the cleaning cycles allows black to recover. If none of the above restores black printing your printer will likely require repair or replacement.In a pinch you can print by selecting photo paper as the media type. This will force the printer to use color even for black text. Bob Headrick, HP Expert I am not an employee of HP, I am a volunteer posting here on my own time. If your problem is solved please click the "Accept as Solution" button If my answer was helpful please click "Yes" to the "Was this post helpful" question. SOLVED Indeed the problem was a clogged printhead and not as I first suspected a firmware problem.I got misled by the fact that the printer was printing black text well, but did not print anything in the black testfield of the Quality checkprintout...I used the technique from above video since printer was not under warranty anymore.I have soaked the printhead as in the video but had to do this much more intensive. I used a part of a sponge soaked in water before moving the printhead on top, then had to move the printhead left and right, and repeated these steps about 20 times. I also left the wet sponge under the printhead during the night while the print cartridges were removed.My printer is working well again, however, I have lost more than half of all my print XL cartridges... quite expensive compared to the cost of a new printer.Also I find that HP needs to find a solution for all these printhead problems. Before, when the printheads were part of the cartridges, HP made the difference..., nowadays, I am not sure.I have 2 HP printers, both having printhead problems. Never had this with my old HP deskjet printers.Printheads should be easily removeable or cleanable.
